JOBGING A SPECIALTY

Your correspondent has no recollection of the Germeyer plumbing business, which may or may not have survived into the 1920's. C.H. Germeyer resided on Market Street near Hamilton Place, which later became 23rd Street. H.S. Musser's bakery was located on Market Street at the northeast corner of Church Street, which is now 21st Street.

The Tripner store, a substantial brick building which still stands, was at present 2014 Market Street. The Tripner business lasted into the middle 1920's. This correspondent remembers it as only a grocery store, but that recollection may be faulty. In later years, the building became successively Stepp's Drug Store, Polk's Drug Store, one or more kitchen equipment stores, and is currently a nail salon.

Coover Heyd, son of Jacob, started a flour, feed, grain and coal business in 1904 at the foot of Heyd Street (South 19th), served by a siding off the Cumberland Valley Railroad. This business subsequently passed into other hands. If your correspondent's memory is reliable, some of these successors were Weirman, Kirkland, and the last of which may have been Charles Clark in the 1930's. The site is now occupied by the Camp Hill Car Wash.

By 1908, Camp Hill was becoming a bedroom community, with breadwinners commuting to Harrisburg by Valley Traction.
